

One in 350 Million, but the wrong one

By A.R. Nash

Everyone who voted for Barack Obama to be our Emperor cast a vote against the Constitution, -without even realizing it. Why would that be true? Because his election was in direct contradiction to the clear prohibition given as the first, and foremost requirement to be eligible for the office.

Article II, Section I, “No person except a natural born citizens...shall be eligible to the office of the President.”. That clearly barred Obama from the office since he is not a natural American citizen.

What kind of citizen is he? He is a provisional citizen turned statutory citizen. Having been fathered by an alien, his citizenship rested on whether or not he lived in the United States for 5 years after the age of 14. If he had returned to Indonesia to live with his mother and step-father at age 18, he would not have obtained American citizenship via the provisional process. He would have needed to naturalized personally as an adult.

If you mistakenly believe that he obtained U.S. Citizenship simply by being born on U.S. soil, you would be both right and wrong. The citizenship he might incorrectly be deemed to have rightfully obtained is citizenship obtained wrongfully. That’s because, although it is supposed by the government that native-birth conveys citizenship to everyone, that is in direct opposition to the actual meaning of the words of the 14th Amendment.

They plainly require that one be subject to the federal government’s full authority. Babies aren’t subject to anything other than the craving for the necessities of baby survival, so they, like all minors, are born subject to the government through the head of the family, the father. He is fully subject because he can be drafted and sent to face death in war.

Immigrants are under that authority as well as citizens, but Obama’s father was not since he was not an immigrant. So the assumption by the government, which it has been falsely making for over a century, is incorrect. But even if it were correct, what kind of citizenship does it produce?

It produces man-made constitutional citizenship, not natural citizenship.

Citizenship comes in an assortment of types. The lowest type is the provisional citizenship of minors with foreign fathers, which can expire. It could be described as Copper Citizenship.

Above that is citizenship by the naturalization process. It’s granted to foreigners who undergo the pledge of allegiance to the Constitution and the United States, and renounce all allegiance to their homeland. It can be called Silver Citizenship.

Above that is statutory citizenship, -that granted to children born abroad of mixed-nationality marriages, -having American & foreign parents. It can be called Golden Citizenship.

Above that is citizenship obtained by the authority of the 14th Amendment for children of legal immigrants who are subject to conscription into the United States military without any right to refuse.

Neither the Congress nor the executive branch can prevent, redefine, withdraw, or repeal the right to that citizenship because it isn’t bestowed by them but by a constitutional amendment that is far above their pay grade.

It can be called “Platinum Citizenship”.

All the citizens of these various types combined together constitute perhaps less than 5 percent of the American population. An examination of census records would be needed to know the actual percentage. But they wouldn’t be reliable because they would come with the presumption that all children of illegal aliens and temporary visitors are citizens, when constitutionally they are not.

So what kind of citizen constitutes the other 95%? They are the indigenes natural citizens. Born of an American father and an American mother. Their citizenship is beyond the reach of naturalization and constitutional statutes. It’s immune to all citizenship law because all the laws that exists were written for births involving foreign parents.

Congress was given the authority to write a uniform naturalization rule for all the states, and nothing more. It has never had any authority over the status of natural citizens. They are outside the purview of its legislating authority. Off-limits, thanks to the Constitution not granting any authority in that area of citizenship.

So how can we describe such citizenship? Platinum is already taken. So we need to go beyond the realm in which those precious metals are found.

Just as natural citizenship is beyond the realm of legal citizenship, so we need to go beyond the realm of terrestrial elements, -to the realm of extraterrestrial elements. I speak of the one that is hardly found on Earth, it only comes from outer space. It provides the name for natural citizenship; namely Iridium Citizenship.

Natural citizenship, like Iridium, is from another realm. Outside of the legal realm, -purely from the realm of natural law. It springs from conformity to the universal law of uniformity.

When genetic uniformity is an element in parental biological makeup, then their off-spring will be naturally identical to them.

When uniformity is an element in the parents' political makeup, then their off-spring will have the same nationality as them by the same natural principle.

What difference does it make what kind of citizenship one has? It makes no difference at all, unless...well...there's one tiny, essentially inconsequential exception. It only involves one single person out of 350,000,000. Hardly worth mentioning. On the other hand, it is something mentioned in the Constitution. It's some little, forgotten, overlooked, misunderstood requirement inserted as an element of presidential eligibility. It's that essentially meaningless mandate that the President be a "natural born citizen", whatever that is. I know, I know, some fanatics think that the Constitution matters for some reason. Whatever.

But since absolutely no one in the government or the media care (including the conservative media) why should anyone else care?

I'm sure the White House doesn't care. After all, the guy that occupies it was a copper citizen growing up. So I'm sure he doesn't resent me pointing out that fact.

So as I was saying... wait, -wait a minute.... I hear something.... -what was that sound? OMG!!! I gotta go. A swap team is about to smash down my door!!!