

Respect for Obama; Why it's Impossible

A little thought that's been in the background of my mind for a long time finally presented itself front and center. It's related to a comment that George Clooney made to Jesse Waters of Fox News when queried on the Red Carpet at the Academy Awards. Waters asked him how he thought "Obama" was doing, and received a response that his name is not Obama but is "President Obama" and that Waters should show some respect because he is the President.

The thought that occurred to me sprang from the fact that he is also "Barry Obama" or "Barry Soetoro", or Barack Jr. and that "Barack" was pronounced by his namesake, his father, with the accent on the first syllable not the last (BAIR[˘]-ek) resulting naturally in the nickname "Barry".

So how does one respect someone (such as a crass politician) who changes the pronunciation of his name in order to make it sound more exotic, ancient, and honorable? Especially a someone who did something similar with his self-reported place of birth?

How do you respect someone who tells the world from 1991 until 2007 through his would-be publisher that he was born in Kenya, but then on the cusp of a bid for the White House changes his story because that story wouldn't comport with what the American people ignorantly believe to be disqualifying for the presidency?

If Barry Obama was to come to my house alone, and, in the course of a conversation, ask me why I don't show him the respect he has earned, I would hardly know where to begin. I might have to resort to a scatter-gun approach with the explanation hitting all kinds of targets in random order, perhaps beginning with the legitimacy of his party's certification of his nomination back in 2008.

How do you respect a man who's own party is unwilling and unable to certify that he is constitutionally eligible to serve as the President, and instead removes that certifying language from the party's Certificate of Nomination?

How do you respect a man who's own party's lawyer in Hawaii (the same attorney who represented his mother in her divorce from his father years earlier, and had access to his birth certificate) refuses to certify him as the official candidate of the Hawaiian Democratic Party which was required in order to be placed on the ballot in Hawaii? Why would he do that other than that he knew something that was inconsistent with presidential eligibility?

How do you respect a man who nevertheless "gets the job done" and gets the rules bent so that his name is placed not only on the Hawaiian ballot, but on the ballots of all the other 49 states and District of Columbia?

That issue is an issue that is publicly known, though not by the general public nor those in the ignorant-media. But what is also troubling is the issues that are unpublicized, -and the answers that are hidden. The list is stupefyingly long.

It might begin with unexplained events and many unanswered questions regarding the Black-hole mystery of what happened before, during, and after the attack on the diplomatic mission and CIA annex in Benghazi, -including the "disappearance", and intimidation-into-silence of all 30 of the survivors of the attack who were rescued.

How can one respect the man for showing leadership which was never shown and who keeps every bit of information about it secret? I would respect him for his handling of the situation if I could but I have no idea of exactly how he handled it since all the facts are SEALED and Secret!

How do you respect a man under whom his subordinates were directed to allow the illegal purchase of over 2,000 deadly semi-automatic weapons that were destined for murderous Mexican drug gangs, and who were told to stand-down and ignore their criminal export across the border into Mexico where neither the Mexican government nor the U.S. DEA and ATF agents stationed there were notified?

How do you respect a man whose close friend, the Attorney General, then obstructed justice and the investigation by Congress after a border patrol agent was murdered by one of those weapons (along with hundreds of innocent Mexican citizens) about which he pretended ignorance?

How do you respect a man who after all avenues of keeping the facts hidden were exhausted, resorted illegitimately to invoking "executive privilege" which is only intended to protect confidential presidential communication? What were those communications, Mr. President? We would all like to know, but can't because they are all SEALED!

How can you respect a man whose ascent to the United States Senate was the result of the public tarring of the expected winner, the incumbent, when details of his sex-life were made notoriously public, but which details were secretly and securely hidden in his divorce papers which were SEALED until the friends of Barry in the infamous criminal Democratic Party Chicago political machine "persuaded" a judge that it would be in his best interest to UNSEAL them? I would like to know what the explanation could possibly be for handing out such a ruling, but the answer is SEALED.

How do you respect a man whose administration has been involved in more criminal political activity than any since President Nixon's White House obstructed justice to such a degree that his Attorney General was convicted and imprisoned? How can anyone respect a man whose underlings are guilty of the IRS scandals, the NSA scandals, the GAO scandals, and the unconstitutional NY Times and Fox News e-mail scandals?

How do you respect a man who is almost running a police state, including his action of signing the National Defense Authorization Act which allows indefinite detention of anyone suspected of ties to terrorists and without their constitutional right of habeas corpus, legal representation, visitors, communication with the outside, nor the right to confront accusers? And let's not forget his follow-up executive order which allows unlimited confiscation of the supplies of American citizens and companies if the government deems they are needed for its self-declared emergency.

But such second-party nefarious actions aren't the only reasons why BO has a respect problem; most of the many other reasons spring directly from the man himself. Every American has a right to know many things that we are not allowed to know because they are SEALED, such as why did he allow his highly prized license to practice law to lapse and not be renewed? It's said that the facts of the matter are true but the explanation is SEALED.

And what proof is there that he ever even took the bar exam and passed it, and didn't instead just obtain admission to the State Bar as a legal instructor?

Same with his previous work history as an attorney. In other words, the professional background of the man is almost entirely a mystery. Has he ever worked for a free-enterprise company in his entire life aside from a legal firm? And what was his position at that law firm? Was it as a licensed attorney, or merely a law clerk? These questions have never been investigated by anyone who obtained any provable answers. So exactly who is this man of mystery and why should we respect him when he doesn't respect us? How could he when so many of us were stupid enough to vote for his vapid, hot-air flim-flam candidacy, -twice?

The only answer that we've been given is that he was a "community organizer" for unions, the Democrat Party, and leftist foundations like the one he served in suing to force banks to make housing loans to the unqualified (sub-prime loans) -in other words, a politically oriented partisan with no ties to any business or organization devoted to free-enterprise, national fiscal responsibility, nor the protection of liberty and defense of the Constitution.

How do you respect a man who was a constitutional law lecturer when he has shown himself to be the most Constitution-violating President in our lifetime? Add his actions to a secret past that is not much more transparent than a Black Hole, and you end up with a man that no sane, objective, concerned citizen can respect.
